Heavy Equipment Operator Instructor Has Construction in Her DNA

When Dawson Vanderwiele walks into a heavy equipment operator training class in Baker Technical Institute in Baker City, Oregon, not many students suspect that she’s the instructor.
After all, construction is still a male-dominated industry and at 19, Dawson is younger than many of the students in the classroom. But that hasn’t stopped Vanderwiele from teaching what she knows well – how to operate heavy equipment.

5 Ways Construction Will Evolve in 2020
Though the nation's second-largest industry seems like it doesn't change much, there are myriad, nuanced forces that shape the way contractors do business and build structures — and Construction Dive is spotting some of these dynamics one story at a time. Here are the top trends to expect in 2020.
