DE&I presents: Best Practices for Diversity, Equity and Inclusion According to the Latest Research
Most companies are jumping on the D&I bandwagon and forging ahead with initiatives, hiring consultants, and implementing training and education around diversity and inclusion. But how do they know what will work? Many of these initiatives fail or are not as successful as they could be. In fact, some of these initiatives backfire and make things worse.

There has been quite a bit of rigorous research on D&I training. In this session, attendees will learn what works and what doesn't according to the research. We will explore specific dos and don'ts with regard to D&I and offer specific case studies on what works and what doesn't. The research is summed up in an article by Dr. Jane Bozarth and used with permission.

DE&I Committee: Body Art in Construction

Body art in construction—such as piercings, tattoos, branding, scarification, dermal anchors, ear...
I believe that the reason for this is our up and coming generation who have grown up celebrating our differences and learning how to embrace those various types of thinking and expression to yield a more cohesive product/service. As the older generation adapts, I feel like many of these statistics, similar to those cited in the article below, will reverse making this narrow minded way of thinking extinct.

The Coaching Corner with Michael Riegel: What is Your Mindset?
My conversations with technical professionals often turn to the concept of mindset. In many cases, the perspective they offer – and one that I held for a long time – was around wanting, no, needing to be right. The data must be right. The process must be right. The solution must be right. Being “right” is a very distinct mindset. As you consider your current and future roles, career path, or the differences of opinion that may have gotten in the way of what you want to accomplish, mindset is a significant element even if you are not aware of its impact and power.

SBA withdraws controversial PPP questionnaire

The Small Business Administration has withdrawn its requirement that Paycheck Protection Program borrowers of more than $2 million complete a loan necessity questionnaire. The SBA notified borrowers last week it would no longer request the questionnaire and that those previously requested are no longer required. The SBA also advised lenders to close open requests in the PPP computer platform and resubmit open loans.

Senate bill would create apprenticeship college consortium
A bill proposed in the U.S. Senate May 27 would create an "apprenticeship college consortium" and oblige the secretary of labor and secretary of education to enter an interagency agreement to promote apprenticeship. The consortium would consist of postsecondary educational institutions, instruction providers, sponsors, intermediaries and employers. Participants would be required to have agreements on establishing credit transfers with apprenticeship program sponsors; awarding academic credit to apprentices; and supporting electronic transcripts for apprenticeship programs.
